VOL. 14, NUMBER 95 MONESSEN, PA, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 2 1915 SIX CENTS THE WEEK

The fall season is here. This country has arranged to loan $500,000,000 to Great Britain and France. Are you still croaking hard times? Maybe a little judgment and business push would help you.

West Mewton Swamped By High School Foot Ball Team

Although the field was covered with mud and water, yet this did not keep Monessen from trouncing West Newton to the tune of 38-0 yesterday afternoon at Page park.

It was impossible to do any open work, but on line plunges and end runs, Monessen tore through their light opponents for gains ranging from 5 to 20 yards. Only one one occasion was the local team held for downs and this was due to a fumble, followed by a penalty of the locals for off side. On the other hand West Newton was never able to make a first down. Time after time the local line broke through and threw the West Newton backs for a loss. When West Newton would start for an end run they would always be nipped back of the line by Monessen's ends, who just seemed to step through the interference.

Monessen played the game without Preston, their sturdy fullback, who was hurt during the first few minutes of play. When Preston was taken from the game, Frazier was switched from half to full and Johnson went in on half. This fast aggregation now began a series of attacks that seemed almost automatic. Williams would take the ball around one end for eight or ten yards and then McKinley would round the other for a like gain. Occasionally Johnson or Frazier would be given the ball and they always responded by carrying it for good gains. On one occasion Frazier came straight through the line for a twenty yard run. The work of the Monessen line in opening holes was of the highest calibre and often the backs were never touched until they reached the secondary defense.

On offence, the best gains were made by Williams and McKinley, but these gains can be attributed largely to the splendid interference afforded by Frazier and Johnson. On defense the men who were most in the limelight were Miller, who repeatedly went back of the line and broke up plays, Newhouse and Boag who did not allow a single gain around their ends, Frazier and McKinley who repeatedly left their feet meeting the line plunges of their opponents on the line of scrimage. Johnston pulled off a brilliant play when he leaped into the air and pulled down one of West Newton's forward passes and ran 25 yards for a touch down. Hess, Ingram and Saro also played a good game both on offence and defence.

Special mention must be made of McQuaide who played his first game at center. His all around brilliant work was a feature. His passes were good, his interference was of the highest type and his defensive work was perfect.

During the last half many substitutions were made, and the work of these men deserve the highest recommendation.

Touchdowns—Williams, 3; McKinley, 2; Johnston. Goals from touchdown, 2.

To Hold Night School

Night school will be inaugurated in the new High school building during the present month, and applications are now being made of the various courses which prospective students wish to take up. The date of the opening session has not yet been announced, but it is expected that everything will be in readiness for the latter part of the month. Sessions will be held every Tuesday and Thursday evenings for twenty weeks and instructors will be supplied for the studies which the students show a preference. Any person desirous of entering night school classes should communicate with Superintendent H. E. Gress, notifying him what courses they desire to study.

Died Yesterday

A telegram was received here yesterday afternoon announcing the death of Mrs. Charles H. Barr at her home in Auuburndale, Fla. Mrs. Barr was formerly Miss Barbara Gregg of Monongahela, and is a sister of Mrs. C. S. Duvall of this city. A few days more than a month ago Mr. and Mrs. Barr returned to their southern home after visiting in this section At that time Mrs. Barr was enjoying the best of health, but shortly after arriving at her home in Auburndale, she was taken suddenly ill and relatives were immediately notified that her condition was serious. The body will be brought to the home of her mother, Mrs. H. E. Gregg at Monongahela for burial Monday. Services will be held Monday morning at 10:30 with interment in the Monongahela cemetery.

Auto Returned

In a fairly good condition the automobile stolen from the garage of John Kittle at Speers a few days ago was brought home from Pittsburgh Thursday by Mr. Kittle, it having been recovered by the Pittsburgh police.

Three men were driving on the Northside in the machine, when a motorcycle approached them from behind. According to a woman who was an eye witness, the three became frightened, fearing evidently that the motorcyclist was a police officer. They jumped from the machine and fled. The woman notified the police, but they were unable to get any trace of the supposed thieves. They located the owner of the car through the number.

Practically all the tools were missing from the tool box, lamps were damaged and the gasoline tank showed dents where the end of a fence rail had been used against it in prying the machine away from a fence into which it was run.

Returns False

District Attorney C. Ward Eicher upon information received from Sheriff Ben Steele, yesterday afternoon at 1 o'clock directed that informations be made against the election officers of Hempfield No. 5, charging them with criminality in connection with the tally and return of the vote cast at the primary election on September 21. The names of the defendant election officers are: Charles B. Luffey, judge; August Nameska, inspector; S. F Koch, inspector; T. M. Gearhart, clerk; and George M. Sanger, clerk. It is charged that the election officers made a false return of the vote cast for Ben Steele, citing in detail instances where it is claimed Mr. Steel was deprived of fairness in the tally of the vote.

Hit By Auto

John Plunkett, aged about 50 years, and giving his home at Donora, was struck by an auto last evening, shortly after six o'clock. The accident happened at Fifth and Donner. No blame was attached to the driver, as he was driving slowly and the man who was under the influence of liquor, staggered back against the machine. He was only slightly injured and was taken to the office of a nearby physician and later removed to the police station.

Politics is just one doggun thing after another. With the primaries over, the six weeks election campaign begins, and there is no surcease for the weary common people. After the lucky campaigners take up their arduous duties "pro bona publico" at the beginning of the year, the presidential campaign and congressional and state primaries will be upon us. Yes, the office seeker we have always with us.

Will Speak Here

Professor J. A. Gillespie of New York City, comes to our city Sunday and will speak in the Star theatre at 3 p. m. on the subject "The Battle of Armageddon or The Overthrow of Satan's Empire"

Many wonder what is meant by the "Batle of Armageddon," mentioned in the Bible, and when it is to be fought. Some believe the present war fulfills the prophesy.

The speaker is said to hold that the present conditions in the world are clearly set forth by the Holy Prophets; that the great railroad and mining strikes, the factory lockouts, the anttagonism between capital and labor, and the present great war in Europe, are clearly pointed out by the scriptures which bear particularly upon the time in which we are now living. He is said further to believe that the present distresss of nations evidences the impending Armageddon battle and the overthrow of Satan's empire.

Don't miss this lecture. He has a message for the employer and the employe, the rich and the poor, Gentile or Jew, the church goer or non church goer. Admission free. No collection. 1t fp

Public School Teachers Will Meet Here October 23

The Westmoreland County Teachers' association will convene here for the first time on Saturday, Oct. 23. An all day session will be held and teachers and principals from all parts of the county will be in attendance. The association has a membership of over 1,000 and hold four meetings during the year.

At the meeting to be held here, Dr. Hinitt, president of W. & J. college, will be the principal speaker of the afternoon session. Superintendent Robert C. Shaw will be present and give an address, and Professor Wentzel of the California Normal, will also be on the program. The full program for the day has not been announced, but will include some of the most noted instructors of this section.

In the morning departmental work will be the main feature with sections for High school, primary and music. At the noon hour the domestic science class of the local High school will furnish lunch for the association.

This is one of the oldest organizations in the county and the meetings are held for the instruction of teachers. All the local teachers are members of the organization. Supt. H. E. Gress is president of the association.

Red Cross League

Monessen Italians have made a thorough organization for the purpose of helping the Red Cross work of their native country,now that Italy is in the thick of the European fray. The new organization, which includes all the various Italian associations of Monessen, is being known as the "Croce Rossa Italiana," and canvass is being made of the community and already a large sum of money has ben raised, with much more in sight, for this merciful enterprise.

Nine Pin Match

Great interest is being manifested in the match game of nine pins to be played on the Colonial Palace alleys Monday evening between the Merchants team and the Independents. Three games will be played and the losers wil pay for the suppers for both teams. The players have been practicing for the past two weeks for the contest and the game Monday night promises great sport. This will be the first official nine pin match to be played in this city.

Long trips by auto trucks prove that the railroads are entering upon an era of new competition. Oliver Marple of the Marple Transfer Co., this week conveyed movings of household goods in the firms big truck to Bedford, Pa., a distance of 107 miles, and ot East Liverpool, Ohio, a distance of 100 miles. These are record breaking trips and occurred without a mishap.

The Passive Amusement

"Unfortunately a large number of young people, in the heyday of life, are devoting their ample margins of energy to passive amusements and degenerating satisfactions. What holds these young people back from profitable pastime is lack of meeting places and of leadership. Suitable meeting places and wise leadership would, for a vast majority of them, change the evenings of waste and drifting into times of upbuilding and character strengthening. The opportunity which society needs for this purpose it possesses in the vast equipment of the public school which lies idle otherwise during the period of popular leisure."

So says Dr. Charles A. Perry, of the United States bureau of education in urging that school buildings he devoted to social and recreational purposes when the plants are not busy with their regular school work.

Statistics gathered by Dr. Perry from 45 leading cities in the United States show that in one month there were over 800,000 in attendance upon evening functions in the public school buildings of these cities. The bulletin declares that these figures mean so many evenings spent in wholesome activity by persons, many of whom would otherwise have spent that time in less beneficial or in positive harmful pastimes. "These 800,000 instances of the influence of the school in one month, whether scattered over many persons or concentrated upon a few, indicate the tremendous force for one month's extension work in these 45 cities."

"The public character of all functions held in the school buildings has the effect of censoring these functions," asserts Dr. Perry. "The activity which a group heartily, publicly and unshamedly seeks, affords the kind of expression that its members need. When youth and maidens consort in the public school building in social life, we may be certain that instincts of racial importance are being cherished, instead of exploited."

Great Life Partners

"Charleston, W. Va., Oct. 1—A. M. Belcher, counsel for the United States Mine Workers, left here today for Denver, Colo., to confer with officials of that organization about asking for the arrest of John D. Rockefeller Jr., in connection with the recent strike troubles in Colorado."

The above is a special sent out from Charleston, but we fear it will fall on deaf ears. John D. has recently paid his mining camps a visit and he visited the homes of the miners and shook their brawny arms and mingled with them socially. In fact capital and labor met on common grounds.

It puts a different scent in the atmosphere. The contenders have no influence further. There will be no prosecution. John D. Rockefeller, the world's greatest money king. by his visit to his coal mines has become a warmer friend of labor than ever before. He sees life from a different angle than before he went there and he sympathizes with labor. The following eloquent words spoken to his miners are credited to Rockefeller.

"Men, we are partners in this business. Anybody from inside the camp or outside who has been telling you that we are enemies has been trying to deceive you. I can't get along without you and you can't get along without me. If I had all the money in the world, I couldn't run these Colorado mines without you workmen, and you with all your brawn and muscle, could not earn a living digging coal out of the ground unless there was capital to buy these mules and lay the tracks and provide a market for the coal. We are partners, that's what we are, and I want to do business with you on that principle."

Cash Needed Everywhere

It is writ that a good name is rather to be chosen than great riches It is a noticeable fact, however, a fact that stands out like the wrinkles in a seersucker coat, that great riches buy more bacon that a good name. That's because one pays cash for the bacon. While the good name may have a high marketable value in heaven, here on earth you have to have an endorser on your paper, although you hold the record for prayer meeting attendance and never drink an eye opener in the morning more exhilerating than liquified Epsom's salts.

Quite a large number of gentlemen wearing Prince Alberts and home laundered collars revile any denomination of filthy lucre. They point out that it is harder for the rich man to enter heaven than it is for a camel to wiggle through the eye of a needle. We are urged to turn our faces from Mammon and forget the cash register, while we get on our knees to supplicate for a fair name. Yet the gentleman in the Prince Albert without the watch pocket is most generally exhorting us for cash or its equivalent in buzz wood and small potatoes. No cash, no text, and when the collections dwindle to resemble dry sentiment at a brewers' convention, why we are immediately urged to get busy somewhere in the vineyard for the cash. Cash lifts mortgages on edifices just the same as it does on distilleries.

The Secret of a Good Figure

often lies in the brassiere. Hundreds of thousands of women wear the Bien-Jolie Brassiere for the reason that they regard it as necessary as a corset. It supports the bust and back and gives the figure the youthful outline fashion decrees.

BIEN JOLIE (BE-AN JO-LEE) BRASSIERES are the daintiest, most serviceable garments imaginable. Only the best of materials are used—for instance, "Walohm", a flexible boning of great durability—absolutely rustless—permitting laundering without removal.

They come in all styles, and your local Dry Goods dealer will show them to you on request. If he does not carry them, he can easily get them for you by writing to us. Send for an illustrated booklet showing styles that are in high favor.

The BROKEN COIN by EMERSON HOUGH

From the Scenario by GRACE CUNARD

COPYRIGHT, 1915, BY WRIGHT A. PATTERSON

Novelized From the Motion Picture Drama of the Same Name. Produced by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

"And his excellency, le Comte Frederick."

"Well, yes, himself as well, then. Nor am I sorry that is true. I fancy perhaps I may have been unjust to him. He has done much, after all, for me, his enemy."

"What, you, his enemy?" grinned Roleau. "Not in the least. Au contraire, mademoiselle!"

"Tais-toi!" exclaimed Kitty, her color rising once more.

CHAPTER XLVII.

To Arms.

Dispersed under the wrath of their savage sovereign, the courtiers of Grahoffen were cudgeling their wits to find some solution to the problem of finding the coin. Where was it? How could it be gained? Upon Count Sachio more than upon any nobleman of the court this question rested grievously. He enlisted therefore as his confederate a man belonging to the secret police in Grahoffen, Ladislaw, a cunning chap with courage.

"Ladislaw," said he, "we must go to Gretzhoffen at once. The coin is there. Either that young woman has it or Count Frederick, or the king. The latter is most likely of the three."

It came out much as Sachio had reasoned. In the confusion now prevailing in Gretzhoffen the two passed unchallenged even to the palace door.

As for the king, he was by this time well forward in his wine. He received Sachio and his friend readily enough. Little it mattered to him who came, for all were welcome. He reproved for his hesitation the chamberlain who announced Sachio.

"Let him come to us," said he. "Let them all come. They are welcome. Sachio?—yes, many a bottle we two have split together."

Not one, but more than one bottle, forsooth, did they two split between them now, and meantime Ladislaw, secret agent, unnoticed, was here and there, in this room and others, unmolested, as a friend of the king, and busy with purposes of his own.

In the chambers of the king all was given over to wine and boastfulness.

There was one who did not accept thus lightly the issue of the day. Count Frederick of Gretzhoffen, most serious of mind by this time, had turned his steps toward the palace, pondering many things meantime. It was now his own deliberate purpose to demand some decision of his monarch as to the eminent enterprise with which all Gretzhoffen was soon to be concerned. He had given orders, as an officer of the army high in power, to mobilize all the forces of the kingdom.

And even as these plans quietly went forward here, King Cortislaw of Grahoffen was pacing his floor, consumed with wrath of a sort not easily placated. "Listen, gentlemen," said he to his officers who gathered about him after Sachio had departed. "Why do you wait. We will win all, or we will lose all today. March then! Cortislaw calls every man under arms to join the colors now!"

Thus, as Count Frederick made his way to the palace, the military forces of both countries were making ready for a struggle which might soon ensue. He passed almost without plan, toward that portion of the palace where he knew he would find King Michael. But at a moment when he was alone and passing near a door which made off from the hall, he heard voices—one voice which suddenly he had conviction was familiar to him—the deep voice of Sachio of Grahoffen! He held his breath that he might catch every word that came from the room within.

"Listen! Ladislaw," he heard Sachio say. "What, did you tell me that you had it? Give it to me, in my hand! It cannot be true."

"None the less, it is true," said another voice, that of the man called Ladislaw. Apparently he held out something which both regarded.

"Ladislaw, you have won fortune for us both. There is no price can be put upon this half of the coin. It is ours, at last."

Count Frederick smiled to himself—smiled for an instant only.

"Yes, Sachio," he heard the answer. "Now if we had our other half here, we could join the two."

"I do not need it," exclaimed Sachio, exultantly. "I have it in my head. I know the reading of both. It tells of the secret recess under the floor of the torture chamber."

Count Frederick heard Sachio laugh deeply—heard his voice once more, self-satisfied.

"Never again," said Sachio, "will I abuse good wine! It fuddled a king for our use and benefit today."

"You are going—there?"

"Yes. To the last hiding place of what we seek."

CHAPTER XLVIII.

In the Torture Chamber.

Count Frederick heard them approach the door, and darted around the nearest corner. He knew which way Sachio would go, and gave him time to establish a lead.

Sachio went straight enough for a time, guided only by his sense of direction, but at length he halted, confused in the passageways which ramified and spread this way and that. It was at that moment that Frederick, himself surprised, came upon him suddenly. The two stood for half an instant, facing each other.

"My dear Frederick," exclaimed Sachio, looking his man fair in the face with that courage which had more than once stood him in such good stead. "How fortunate! I was just on my way on an errand of the king."

"I know something of the ways below here," said Frederick. "I have been here often. Perhaps between us we may discover what you seek. In view of what so recently has passed, it would be easier for you to be our enemy than our friend—is it not true, dear Sachio?"

Sachio made no reply. They walked forward, descending, advancing into the darker portions of the subterranean passages.

"By the way, my dear Sachio," said Frederick, at length—he had Sachio just slightly by the arm, and walked abreast of him, so there might be not sudden treachery—"there is a room yonder where we have long hidden our medieval armor of this palace. Would you like to see it? It is just beyond."

"It is dark," said Sachio, laughing lightly, and hesitating. "What is there in there?"

"It might be the very torture chamber of old Gretzhoffen, my dear Sachio! It might be the treasure chamber of the king himself—the old king! It might be here that were concealed the treasures of Gretzhoffen—is it not true? You know of them?"

"I have never heard of them, my dear Frederick," replied Sachio.

"Not so, my friend. You have half the coin. It is but counterfeit. The true half—that half which you sought in my quarters so feloniously—is in possession of another."

"You mean that wench—that American—"

It was that instant that the heavy hand of Count Frederick smote him full in the face. "You shall not mention her!" he growled; and the next instant he had Sachio by the shoulders and was thrusting him with all his power toward the open door. It had all along been his intention to imprison Sachio here in the torture chamber.

The next moment Count Frederick felt at his back the impact of another man. The three struggled furiously.

"Quick! Shoot him!" panted Sachio. "Kill him! I cannot last!"

"I am not armed," cried Ladislaw. "Let me search."

Frederick felt the hands of his new enemy feeling at his pockets, searching for some weapon, and rejoiced that he also at the moment was unarmed. At least the conflict would be more even now.

But they were more than a match for him. Count Frederick felt an arm throttle him, felt his eyes almost start from his head, felt his breath leaving him. Slowly slipping, inch by inch, he felt himself impelled toward the open door. Strive as best he could, he found himself unable to resist the joint attack of these two desperate men.

A moment later he heard the heavy clang of the door behind him.

He was alone. He had proved the victim of the plan which he had formed. He was locked in the torture chamber of Gretzhoffen, that place of horror which he had reserved for his enemy. He had failed. He had lost all—all! He had been the cause, perhaps, of the ruin of his country!

CHAPTER XLIX.

Le Roi S'Amuse.

It was not often in his muddled life that Michael had so full warrant to give rein to his impulses. He had not noted the absence of Sachio or Ladislaw. After a time, his attendants, hesitating, told him that a woman was waiting to be admitted. Her name was one which came to his brain now above all others.

"Admit her at once, yes—why do you delay?"

She came before him now, pale, downcast, almost trembling. Heavy enough had been the burden of anxiety she long had carried. She had come to the king, but she sought not this weak king's comforting. No, she had come hither in search of the man on whom even the king must rely.

"Ah, mademoiselle," he began, half maudlin, "you have come to us at last. Why were you so absurdly long? We have grieved for you, and who would grieve the king?"

"Your majesty," said Kitty Gray, and half shuddered as she gave the title, gazing as she did upon the bloated face of this man who claimed to be a king. "Your majesty, you are more than kind to remember so unimportant a person."

"Unimportant! Do not say that word. Unimportant—when all we have thought or was yourself. What has kept you away?—though I am sure you came as soon as you could."

"Yes, your majesty, as soon as I could."

"And because you have heard of what we have done today, of how we have routed the army of yonder King Cortislaw—it was cleverly done, mademoiselle, though I do say it."

"And what of him who was with you, your majesty?"

"Whom do you mean? Count Sachio?"

"Count Sachio? Was he here, your majesty? I meant another."

"Ah, always you mean that other. Always he seeks to come between his king and his king's desire," said he, complainingly.

"And what is it that your majesty desires?"

"Why, my majesty desires a many things, my dear," he replied, in vinous liberty. "My majesty desired, a while ago, an extra bottle of Beloc, and my majesty sent a man, Count Sachio, yonder to bring it. My majesty desires—"

"Sachio here!"

"Yes, here. You have said that twice. He was here, twice or once—I know not how many times. But now you are here, mademoiselle, and that is enough. My majesty desires—"

He advanced toward her. The leer upon his puffed face gave her swift disgust as well as terror. With no purpose whatever, as he stumbled forward she fled from the room, fled she knew not where.

Without much plan, Kitty turned toward the interior of the palace, and down the long hall which before that time she had explored. Something told her that Frederick, if he were here in the palace now, had passed that way.

The torture chamber—that dread spot! Must she go there to look for him? She sped on rapidly along these passageways which she had learned before. Through the last deep sunken tunnel which led to the door of the torture chamber itself she passed alone, trembling with fear, and yet resolved.

The door was locked. She turned to see the key upon the wall. As she turned there came to her a faint sound. Someone was knocking at the door. The blood stopped at her heart. She felt her face go cold. Had the dead indeed come to life? Was it indeed true that some hand from beyond the grave alone could point out the hiding place of this treasure? What could it mean?

But the knocking at the door grew bolder. She heard a voice—a faint voice through the steel facing of the inner cavern. Trembling, she fitted the key, gave one great push to open the door, which yielded the more quickly to a power exerted within. She saw the faint gleam of a light added to those of her own candle; saw the face of the man she had sought!

"You?" she cried. "It is you?"

She heard him answer calmly, slowly, without agitation, as though all the time he had been convinced she would come.

"It is ended," said Count Frederick at last, slowly. "Never again will I doubt! I prayed for you, prayed that you should understand before I died. But it was meant for you to come for me, that I might know—know as much as they who are here, who have been my fellows and my friends. Mademoiselle—I had said good-by to everything excepting one. There was that left which no man should die without knowing—that experience which only makes life worth living. I have dreaded all things, but now I hope. I must—I shall hope!"

He stooped toward her now, and for the moment each was careless of the strange surroundings in which they stood. For a half moment the heart of Kitty Gray was on the point of surrender.

"Monsieur le comte, for that we have no time now," said she gently. "It was but chance which brought me here."

"Chance? Yes, if fate, if the hand of heaven mean chance, I shall call it chance, not otherwise. I say that it was the plan of fate long ago that you should come to me, now and here."

"We have come close to the secret," said Kitty Gray slowly. "But we have come closer to perils."

"True, more than you know."

"What do you mean?"

"Sachio was here—it was he and his man who thrust me in here, where I had planned to place him. They know it all—all that we do now, mademoiselle. Sachio himself has gone to carry his news to his king. We are undone, mademoiselle! There will be war."

"If war, then why do we wait here?" she demanded of him. "War is what we have sought to avoid for this kingdom by our own knowledge of the coin. If it be too late—why, then, we must fight. Ah, how I wish I were a man, that I might fight as well."

"You have fought well for all of us, mademoiselle," said Frederick. "We have repulsed our enemies. Would you repulse—your friend?"

She made no answer, but was away before him in the dark passageway.

CHAPTER L.

The Battle.

Sachio and Ladislaw, as may be guessed, allowed no grass to grow under their feet as they hastened toward their own kingdom, leaving behind them the befuddled monarch who had no idea that he had entertained such vipers.

They never reached the confines of Grahoffen kingdom; instead they met the army of Cortislaw already afield and well across the neutral lands.

"Look!" cried Sachio. "Cortislaw is afoot! By the Lord! Yonder comes a real king."

It was even so. Soon they were among the advance guards, the skirmishers of the main force, which were advancing. In time they were brought to the bodyguard of the king himself, for Cortislaw marched with his men, after the fashion of monarchs of old. He had put all his fortunes to the test that day.

"What! Sachio," he said, as he grimly regarded that nobleman. "You have failed again?"

"No, your majesty, I have not failed. I bring you success, at last."

He opened the palm which he raised before the eyes of his king. In it lay the broken half of the Gretzhoffen coin.

"The coin!—by our lady! It is ours! Bring it to me closer. Give it to me! Let me see!"

"The secret is ours!" said he. "The torture chamber—the treasure!"

"It lies in the northeast corner of the palace, deep under the walls," said Sachio. "Come, let us march steadily, toward the unsuspecting city of Gretzhoffen, governed by an addled king too far gone in his cups to suspect danger of any sort—a king never strong, and now weaker than his wont at a time when all the forces of a real king were needed."

They met no resistance at the walls of Gretzhoffen itself. The armies of King Michael were not in evidence.

The people of Gretzhoffen ran this way and that, leaderless. "Where are our forces?" they demanded. "Where is the army? Where is the king? Where is Count Frederick?"

To these demands came no present answer. The forces of the enemy advanced along the avenues.

"Yonder it lies, your majesty," said Count Sachio, pointing to the castle which they approached. "Deep beneath the walls yonder, in the northeast corner, my eyes saw the torture chamber of Gretzhoffen."

"Did you find the treasure?" demanded Cortislaw.

"No, your majesty, that was explored tion fit for your majesty's hands alone. I did not search for it. Rather, I hastened to bring your majesty here in your own person."

"We soon shall know," said Cortislaw, and signaled the advance.

The sound of hoofs and trampling feet filled the streets of Gretzhoffen. The army of Gretzhoffen, in close formation, marched forward under the summons of the buglers. Quickly passing down the main avenue which led to the palace, they spread out by columns right and left, covering the full front of that edifice, which lay before them hidden in its screen of shrubbery.

"Look, your majesty," said Sachio, and pointed.

Through a little break in the screening wall of green he saw the plume of a horseman, who sat motionless as though waiting.

"One of their guards!" exclaimed Cortislaw. "Go take him. Stop for nothing. Press on into the palace itself."

The front ranks broke forward, each eager to be the first to take captive the foeman thus discovered.

Not one man, but many hundreds, met their coming—the forces of Gretzhoffen in ambush. In the first front the picked men of the guard had been stationed under the screening shrubbery by the actual commander in chief of the Gretzhoffen forces that day—none less than Count Frederick himself.

In such brief time as had been allowed him, he had made his arrangements and posted his forces in what he conceived to be the only feasible strategy. Now the jaws were sprung. Whether trap or victim should prove the stronger was later to be known.

The bugles of Gretzhoffen, high and clear, sounded the counter-charge. The advancing forces of Grahoffen were met full in the face by a level sleet of missiles, and from their covering the forces of Gretzhoffen sprang out, section after section. Face to face, line against line, the two detachments met in the shock of arms.

SATURDAY—Chapter twenty of "The Diamond From the Sky, "The Soul Stranglers."

Engineer Dead

John Zorn, the Baltimore & Ohio engineer, who received a bullet wound in the breast several days ago at Reduction Station, near West Newton during a quarrel with George S. Myers, died in the McKeesport hospital early yesterday morning. Myers, who is accused of firing the shot which ultimately resulted in the death of Zorn, is still in the county jail at Greensburg, and will be held pending a postmortem on the body of Zorn by Deputy Coroner W. J. Potts. A short time after the shooting and after the injured man had been removed to the hospital, he made a statement implicating Myers.

The despesition, according to the authorities, was not legal because Zorn was not informed before the desposition was taken that he was going to die. Afterwards Sergeant McLaughlin received from Zorn's wife a statement that Myers did not fire the shot, but that he struck Myers on the head with the butt end of a revolver, and when the impact was made, the revolver was exploded and the bullet entered Zorn's breast.

It is claimed that other witnesses will testify to that fact before the coroner. It is said Zorn told his wife before he died the story she related to the officers.

Many Are Wed

During the month of September, 193 couples were granted marriage licenses. The last couple received number 39.574 The number of licenses granted this month is smaller than at any September for three years. Last September the number granted was 208. In the same month of 1913, the number was 219 and in 1912, the number was 192. Thus far this year, the total number granted has been 1.407. There has been a falling off in the number of licenses granted to foreigners. These are the statistics for Westmoreland county.

Dear Editor:—

I am a mill man and have to work day and night turn, and there is a pesky rooster lives 40 feet away from my bedroom window that crows so noisily that I have been forced to tear the cotton from my blanket to stuff my ears shut, so that I can get any sleep. I can't stand it any longer. All summer I had to go to bed with the doors closed tight and the windows down Is there any way this rooster can be disposed of?

Editor—Yes This rooster is probably a year old, and last year was a Democratic year. Wait until November, and the rooster will die a natural death.

Are You A Victim?

Are you suffefring from coryza today? No? Yes? Oh, you don't know what it is. Then you'll have to have it described to you.

The general symptoms are sneezing, itching of the mucous membrane, and other troubles of the nasal passages. In the first stages there are no secretions, but later a watery mucous flows from the nose and excoriates the lip, this time followed by a copious muco-purlent discharge. It is essentially a germ disease and is highly infectious.

Its immediate cause is the lodging of a germ in the nasal passages of a person whose physical condition is not of the best, the result of which is congestion of the mucous membranes of the nasal passages, this sometimes spreading to include the entire respiratory tract. The exciting cause may be automobile rides, where dust may collect in the nostrils; sudden changes in weather; wet feet; exposure to cold drafts or wet when the body is overheated; and other things similar in nature.

What you still don't know what coryza is? Why, it is only the old and familiar visitor—cold-in-the-head in emdical guise. Just at present he is visiting a great number of people in Monessen and vicinity, because of the sudden change to cold wet weather over night, and he is present in all stages. It is estimated that half the town, more or less, is entertaining this visitor in some part of his respiratory tract today.

Most complete is the first program arranged by Prof. W. H. Cober, supervisor of the Rostraver township schools for an educational meeting to be held on Saturday, Oct. 9, at the Concord school house, from 9:30 a. m. to 3:30 p. m. All the subjects will be in relation to school work and there will be some good talks made.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured
by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.
We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.
